number. You have to have it because you will be experiencing some problems with Yakuake, and because it is still a Beta. Having Yakuake activated allows you to be able to close it by pressing the Super key or the number 5. I really love how Yakuake looks in Ubuntu and how you can use a lot of colors to highlight your terminals. Super key + 5 I did some research on this and it appears that I might have to install the BETA Version of Yakuake. I think I will leave it in the Beta and try it out and see if there is any issues that I will have with it. I was not able to get into a program I use called Smuxi that will allow me to talk to different IRC servers at once, but I do have Skype and that works great. I just downloaded the Beta Version of Yakuake and I am pretty happy with the Version it has so far. As I said, I love the Colors that it has and I think that you can change the colors with the terminal you are using. I have also noticed that when you use the terminal it seems like it takes longer to startup than when I had that in Windows. I do not know how much that is related to the Beta Version, but I will let you know how it goes and keep you posted. If you want to try out the Beta Version of Yakuake without having to do a full update, you can install it directly from the Software Center. Go to: About Hi, I am Chris. Stay tuned and be well!Q: Show all items in a ListBox I have a listbox, that contains a list of months. The ListBox has its "SelectionMode" set to multiple, and I have added a SelectedItems Property. I want to show all items in the ListBox in a ListView, what is the best way to do this? A: You can either remove the selection mode, or just use an ItemsSource and not worry about what is selected. In the code below, the first option removes the selection mode, and the second option shows the items in the listbox. Code example: // Option 1 listbox. 82157476af
